5 QUESTIONS with Candace Karch

In the gallery or at the bar, she has your night covered

INTERVIEW. Bambi Gallery (www.bambiproject.com) throws a hot-pink opening reception to talk about. We'd expect no less from owner and artist Candace Karch, who you can also catch bartending at Johnny Brenda's — and, apparently, on Second Life.

Q What is the loudest girl with the messiest eye makeup ordering at JB's on a Saturday?

A I think her name was Peter Dougherty and she was with Kate Moss drinking Jack and Diet Coke.

Q You throw a wicked First Friday party — what's your secret?

A Tell everyone you have an open bar and Bambi will be signing autographs.

Q Where are you on a Friday night?

A I am making my Wii avatar look like a prostitute so I can drop her in Second Life to make me easy money for a glamorous Saturday evening.

Q You can only eat at one restaurant for all of 2009 — which one?

A Marakash. I like to be surrounded by fluffy pillows while eating with my hands and licking someone else's fingers, all with a hookah in my mouth.

Q Where do you buy your shoes? Seriously — we want them.

A Girl, you don't pay for shoes when you date a first-class baggage handler at the airport.

Ladies night out — hold the box wine

Ladies night is great, but it can be a lot greater than watching "Love Actually" with a spread of Christmas candy and cheap wine.

Main event

No experience is necessary at Dr. Sketchy's Philly, an "anti-art school" that combines drawing and cabaret. This month's models are the lovely Ginger Leigh and Cherry Bomb of local burlesque troop Peek-a-Boo Revue, and Ms. Cocktail Onion will be your bartender for the evening (Friday, 7 p.m., Fleisher Art Memorial, 719 Catharine St., $12-$20, www.drsketchy-philly.blogspot.com).

Sweets and sips

Beau Monde (Sixth and Bainbridge streets, 215-592-0656) does both sweet and savory crepes, but something about Nutella on a fancy pancake just sounds right. Decadent options include chocolate and Grand Marnier; banana, white chocolate, caramel and vanilla ice cream; and apple, goat cheese and creme fraiche. METRO/MW
